Let me get this straight.

He's trying to argue that the fact that the firm he represents has been found to be defrauding the courts, committing ID theft, and has been catastrophically sanctioned for that behavior via monetary sanctions (that they are currently refusing to comply with) and criminal referrals to the USAO and IRS, is totally irrelevant to the case before the Georgia court.

And to support this argument (that the so-called irrelevant documents should not be filed), he files a couple of documents that, by his own admission, are totally irrelevant?

Now we know why this guy has to work for Prenda.

Have to admit this is one of the Prenda lawsuits I have been trolling because you just knew Nazaire's response was going to be off the wall, but have to agree with SJD, he did exceed expectations.

The question is: Why is Prenda allowing this very obvious loose cannon to careen around the deck of their sinking ship?

Insanity plea? Or planning to stall for time so XBiz can send off the S.S. Prenda to sail for territories not named the USA?

Fellas! Let's give the guy a break. Trolling websites that allow you to post anonymously is hard, hard work. Nazaire can't even get his thoughts together, never mind make a logical argument for the court.

[...] Ah, Prenda's local in Georgia, Jacques Nazaire... The amount of entertainment he provides should get him promoted to a lutz (at least) in Prenda's ranks. I wrote about Nazaire's delusional pleading a month ago; Popehat (among others) scoffed at Nazaire's crazy argument that Wright' See all stories on this topic [...]

You are all missing his point. One of the people in the article, or the person who sent the email, might be gay and live in a liberal state like Oregon. It makes perfect sense... to Nazaire... (Note to Nazaire this is sarcasm. Relax. Go read a good book – like The Crown: A Tale of Blood, Women and Wine.)

This is the guy who advertised on Craigslist, right? Craigslist has also run solicitations from, you know, people who want someone to dress up in a latex Richard Nixon mask and flog them or similar alternative pasttimes. Therefore, under Nazaire's logic, his arguments must be irrelevant.
